One was heard to remark that is these days of the printing press and the typewriter it seemed as if the circus might do well to abandon its old line conservatism and establish a publicity department so that items of possible general appeal might be conveyed to describe the conveyed to the populace through the medium of the public prints. But the speaker added that to the best of his knowledge this that bit of ciandestine information one was able to surmise that the circus people, or at least part of them, had indulged in the playing of harmless tricks upon unguarded individuels. It seems that this custom has prevailed in the now amalgamated ass so that in some quarters the day immediately following March 21 and preceding the second day of April has come to be known as April First.

By considerable extension of the in vestigator's expense account it was learned that a youth of Darien, Conn. named Elmer Dawson, went to work for the menagerie League of Nations yes terday morning and received an mediate assignment from John Patter son, boss of the led stock department. The only other animals of the younger set that might possibly meet Elmer Dawson's requirements were a girl giraffe and a boy rhinoceros. The giraffe, although born last Wednesday, is already tall enough to snip the top-mast leaves of a Lombardy poplar, its favorite viand. So in Elmer's opinion there was no chance of persuading even the least maternal zebra that it was her offspring. Therefore there was left to him only the alternative, the rhinoceroa. Alternately applying a toothbrush dipped in yellow paint and a second toothbrush dipped in black paint Elmer speedily transformed the gamboling young rhino into the perfect likeness of a zebra until he came to the incisor tooth protruding unward from the bedder favorite viand. So in Elmer's opinion tooth protruding upward from the bridge of the rhino's nose and which is referred to by the uninformed as its horn.

This was, indeed, perplexing. Here he had given up most of his luncheon hour to striping a rhinoceros until its imbs and torso would pass anywhere for those of a zebra, only to be reminded that he had forgotten the horn. But the chronicle is vain if the reader has not already detected that Elmer Dawson is

The sailors who up to that moment had been starving, the ship being a derelict, were so refreshed after a hearty meal of porpoise blubber that they were able to steer the craft into port and claim sal-vage which made each and every one of them a rich man.
